BODILY AUTONOMY

Bodily autonomy is one of the most fundamental rights we have as human beings. However, across the country, this fundamental right is being challenged. We will discuss some of the many ways marginalized bodies are restricted, policed, and violated.

Laws have been proposed and passed that limit the rights of transgender and non-binary individuals, impacting their access to essential medical care and their ability to exist in public spaces. The fight for reproductive choice is also an ongoing struggle that has taken critical decisions out of the hands of individuals. Weight stigma, which disproportionately impacts women of color, is yet another way we police bodies that has a profoundly negative impact on people's physical and mental health. People of color also face discrimination based on their hair texture and style.

- Out of 629,898 abortions reported to the CDC for 2019, Black women accounted for 38.4 percent of them. By comparison, white women made up 33.4 percent of those abortions.
- Stigma surrounding Afro-textured hair has its origins in slavery and systemic pressure to conform to white beauty standards.
- In the murders of Eric Garner and Michael Brown, police officers used the victims' physical size as a justification for the violence inflicted on them. Their stories illustrate the links between systemic racism, fatphobia, and violence against larger Black bodies.

FINANCIAL EMPOWERMENT

Women's financial empowerment is critical to achieving gender equity. Generations of women were denied control over their financial life, and it wasn't until 1974 that women were allowed to have credit cards in their own name.

Today, more women are taking control of their finances, and making important decisions about budgeting, saving, and investing. Despite all this progress, inequities persist, with bias. The racial, gender, and motherhood pay gaps continue to hold women back from reaching their full economic potential. Women are also still expected to do a significant amount of unpaid labor such as childcare, caring for older relatives, and maintaining the home.

- According to a new study from PayScale, the gender pay gap can mean $900,000 in lost wages over a woman's lifetime. This loss of financial power has huge implications for women's long-term quality of life.
- Though Black women-owned businesses are experiencing rapid growth, their revenue remains comparatively low, which is partly due to lack of access to capital; Black women receive less than .35% of all venture capital funding.
- 94-99% of domestic violence survivors have experienced economic abuse

GUN VIOLENCE

If you have been impacted, please consider your well-being before engaging with this material. The United States has the highest number of civilian-owned firearms in the world. Research makes clear that passing gun sense laws reduces gun violence, however, guns remain a major threat to our health and safety.

From school hallways to music festivals and nightclubs to homes and communities across the country, women experience unacceptably high levels of gun violence that leave them at heightened risk of harm and death. We will explore the history of gun ownership in America, and how it has impacted the lives of marginalized people.

- About half of all suicides are committed with guns, and this proportion has been rising. Between 2019 and 2022, the rate of firearm suicide increased 11%
- In an average month, 70 women in the U.S. are shot to death by intimate partners, and many more are injured.
- Firearm homicide disproportionately impacts teens of color: Latino/Latina teens and children are 4x more likely and Black children and teens are 20x more likely to die by firearm homicide, compared to their white counterparts.
- Only half of states prohibit people with hate crime convictions from having firearms.

TRANSPORTATION

Access to transportation impacts every aspect of our lives, from our ability to get to work, access healthcare, and educate our children. With so much at stake, transportation equity is critical to eliminating racism and empowering women. Reimagining the way we think about our roads, buses, and sidewalks is essential for addressing historical injustices and present-day inequities including access to safe transportation, sexual harassment on public transportation, and roads that are unsafe for pedestrians.

These disparities disproportionately affect people of color and low-income individuals, contributing to ongoing economic and social inequalities. Together, we can create transportation systems that serve as catalysts for broader societal change, and foster inclusivity, justice, and empowerment for all.

- The national interstate highway system, which began to fully take shape after the passage of the Federal Highway Act of 1956, effectively gutted many Black and brown communities by routing highways directly, and sometimes purposefully, through those communities.
- In 2023, more than 11,500 wheelchairs, power wheelchairs, and scooters were lost, damaged, delayed, or stolen during air travel.
- Women sitting in the front seat of a car are 73% more likely than men to suffer a severe injury during a car crash, and 17% more likely to die
